

MYP Community Project

We donated young readers books to the teachers at Jere Whitson Elementary.

Investigating

Investigating: Goal

Our goal while planning this project was to be able to impact the youth in our community. To us, education is important. Reading is a vital part of the mind's growing process. Books are needed to impact young children and growing individual's thinking process and lives. We have both always loved working with young children at church and other events. Helping educate the young readers by giving their teachers books, can impact their lives.

QP4. When you think about the benefits of reading books for fun, which of the following are the top benefits you most want your child to get from reading books for fun?

This information shows that when reading many children learn how to process more information at one time and are able to use their imagination.

Planning

Planning: Research

As research for our project, we used the internet and leading members of the education community. One of the webpages that helped us during research told of how others had the same idea as we did. It implanted new ideas in our brains of how the process could be changed. The other website used helped us get a better idea of where to take the books after they have been donated to us.

Taking Action

Taking Action: Plan

1. Get the word out about book donations.
2. Find a place to take the books.
3. Deliver to the place we decided needed the books.

During the process of the project, our plan changed more than once. At first, our plan was to find a specific teacher that would need books for their library in their classroom. Then, we decided to collect books appropriate for elementary school students and set them up on a table where the teachers can chose books for their rooms.

Reflection

Reflection

The community project strengthened our learner profile traits. We had to be thinkers, open-minded, and caring. We had to be thinkers to make a way for our project to come together smoothly. We also thought of ways to collect the donated books, where to store them, and when to deliver to Jere Whitson. We were open-minded to one another's ideas and ways we could make our project better. In addition, we were caring because we wanted to inspire the youth in our community to read and grow as students to achieve all their goals.
